THE FIVE-DAY WEEK AND THE SABBATH

By F. M. ISSERMAN

A few days ago the labour and industrial world was startled by the announcement of the Ford Company of Detroit that it had instituted the five-day week for all its workers. Subsequent to this announcement, a resolution was presented at the annual meeting of the American Federation of Labour, advocating the forty-hour week and the five-day week. The resolution, favoring a maximum of forty working hours per week was carried, without however the additional stipulation that two days in the week must be entirely free. Both the Ford Company and the A. F. of L. will come in for their share of criticism for cutting down the working week. Already Judge Elbert T. Gary, head of the United States Steel Corporation, has through the press mildly censored the Ford Company for its radical innovation. Other staunch upholders of things as they are will echo the sentiments of this eighty-year-old industrialist, and will deplore the diminution of the working hours, just as twenty years ago men of similar attitude fought to maintain the ten-hour day, and just as every social advance has been stubbornly opposed. What after all, are the advantages of a mechanical civilization, if it does not make the lives of men more comfortable, if it does not lessen the drudgery of the masses? The invention of machinery has benefited man because it has enabled him to spend less time and effort in doing certain tasks, and has given him more and more leisure. Two hundred years ago it took one man working a long day to build one chair. To-day one machine in one day will turn out a hundred like it. If ten men are required to make the machine, the labour of ninety men per day has been saved. This simply means that the individual must work less to provide food, shelter and clothes for himself and his family. The liberation of men from the drudgery of the factory is a wholesome thing. There was a time when every worker was a craftsman, and lavished on his work the affection and joy of the artist. In these days of specialization, where so many men in the factories perform the same monotonous mechanical tasks for days and months and years, work has lost much of its previous pleasure. To the average factory hand, the joys of creative achievement and accomplishment are denied, and to him the lessening of the number of working hours is a real boon. It will give him more leisure for recreation, for self-development and for culture. His salvation is not to be found in more work but in less work. For him the five day week will spell new and greater opportunity.

The late Charles P. Steinmetz, inventor and electrical genius, until his death chief engineer of the General Electric Company, made public his view that the increase of inventions would in a short while make the four-hour day possible. Steinmetz was ahead of his time, but we will say that his vision will never be realized. His statement indicates that the gradual lessening of working hours is not impractical. The initial experiment with the five-day week will be eagerly watched, and if it succeeds, its institution is bound to be universal.

A MOVE TOWARDS PEACE

At the Joint Distribution Committee Conference held at Chicago this week the prevailing sentiment seemed to favour the reaching of an understanding with the Zionists.

The opinion of the unbiased observers has all along been that a rapprochement between the two camps was not only desirable, but imperative.

The Yiddish Day and Daily News, which certainly cannot be accused of anti-Zionist leanings, have for some time been advocating editorially that peace must be made. A number of our Anglo-Jewish contemporaries, solicitous of the best interests of Jewry, have urged both parties to lay aside their weapons. This journal has been from the first among those who deplored the unnecessary and harmful quarrel.

Except for a few extremely fanatical partisans, whose real outruns their judgment, and who are prepared to sacrifice the broader national interests for party tactics, the opinion of the general public has been that the antagonism between the two groups—both serving noble causes—was entirely uncalled for. Relief and Zionism are not mutually exclusive, nor is Jewish colonization in agrarian Russia promoted as a palliative, inconsistent with Palestinian effort.

It is believed that representatives of the two sides met in New York before the conference and prepared the ground for the resolution of the conference. The Chicago gathering listened to the letter of appeal for peace sent by the grand old man of American Jewry—Nathan Strauss—and the response was indeed gratifying. Dr. Joseph Rosen will visit Palestine on his way back to Russia and his report will be acted upon by the Joint Distribution Committee.

The J. D. C. activities are a philanthropic endeavour based on a humanitarian impulse. Zionism is a conception of the purpose of Jewish existence, translated into Palestine reconstruction effort. It is possible to carry on both modes of work without friction.

TASHRACK

American Jewish letters suffered a severe loss last week when the death occurred of Israel Zevin, better known by his pseudonym of Tashrack, in the prime of his creativeness.

Tashrack was pre-eminently a literary man. His main concern was to observe life in its simple, primal forms. He kept away from the turmoil of organizational activities, where one is mistakenly apt to look for significant Jewish manifestations. He was not a party man. He loved people, human beings, in their everyday life and he made it his object to understand them and to depict their doings.

Tashrack came to America as a young man in his teens, many years ago, and has had an opportunity of observing the process of adaptation of the older generation to the new conditions of American life. He has seen the "Chayim, the Custom Peddlers" grow and develop from little itinerant business men, into citizens of wealth and substance, pillars of the communities. He has noticed the changes in their characters, in their attitudes; the metamorphoses of their personalities. He understood all their foibles, all their frailties; their little ambitions and disappointments. And he was never

"There is no solution to the Jewish problem. Because of the unalterable character of the Jewish past and the constitution of the Jewish spirit, it must go on. The Jewish problem is no nearer solution to-day than it was in the days of Julius Caesar. That that problem could not be eliminated by external oppression and persecution, the world at large has long since learned. That it cannot be solved by servile self-denial and self-obliteration, the Jew is rapidly learning himself. The great mass of Jews will not disappear. They will not lose their identity, nor are they likely to be able to impose or to desire to impose that identity on others. They are, they will remain, a group apart. Not hostile or opposed to, but in some very definite though not always definable ways, they will continue distinct and different from the rest of the world. The really significant question does not concern itself with the fact of the survival of the Jew. That is assured. What is important, and not so sure, is the effect which such survival will have both on the Jewish and non-Jewish groups. What will be the qualitative influence on Jew and Gentile of the difference and distinctness of which I have spoken? It is impossible to say. Were one to judge the future by the past, there would be more fear than hope .... But there has come into human affairs a new and better tendency, the effort of some men everywhere to understand and to welcome rather than to condemn and obliterate differences between themselves and others .... In the meantime, it is this tendency which is the brightest spot on the horizon of Jewish as well as world affairs. For if once it be accepted as a fact that the Jewish group, the Jewish people, even the Jewish problem, is not to disappear but is to go on as a distinctive part of the composite life of the world, there may once again come into and through the life of Israel much that shall be of value to itself and to all mankind."—James Waterman Wise in the Century Magazine.

Each separate Jewish child is considered a special charge, a valuable asset. At a time when the children leave the home for school and college the value of the spiritual atmosphere of the Jewish home is of paramount importance. The mother has time to welcome the confidences of her husband and children and to sympathize with their interests. She is placid and pleasant and considers the family darning and mending a sedative. She is happy performing her daily round rewarded by the love and respect of her household. When she visits or receives guests it is part of her training to put her own affairs from her mind and give herself for the time to the interests of others. She takes her religious observances for granted. In work for an organization or for charity she seeks no office but is willing to do real service as a mere committee member. She is distinguished by quiet reserve and steadfastness of purpose in keeping the light of her religion burning .... Who is this creature, the old-fashioned Jewess, or is she wholly imaginary? Evidently, neither. The United Synagogue Recorder speaks of her quite matter-of-factly as "the average Jewish Englishwoman."

Under the auspices of the Conference of Jewish Women's Organizations of Milwaukee a series of lectures on the subject of child rearing is being inaugurated. This attempt should be the indirect means of bringing to many children the benefits of correct supervision, better understanding, balance, health and happiness. Men and women who are psychologists and physicians will speak to Jewish mothers in the interest of intelligent motherhood and the beauty of it is that every one will be there to hear. Even mothers who can be busy any day and every day in activities outside their homes, even mothers who want to know about current events, literary circles, philanthropic work or politics before they want to hear about bringing up children, even these mothers will be there with new zest for an old-fashioned, humdrum theme enlarged. Why the baby needs spinach and no pacifier, why it is easier to bring up a child in good habits from the beginning, why it should be protected from excitement and never be frightened, how it should receive proper sex instruction, all these things and more will be served up before mothers in great numbers. Standing room only can almost be guaranteed and for once an important activity is going to get a hearing in proportion to the wonderful advantages it offers. Why? Simply because the women at the head of the child study lectures have had the imagination, foresight and enterprise to present the findings of science [illegible] It's going to be stylish in the first place, that's the point. Well?

There are Jews scattered in towns and isolated villages from coast to coast of the Dominion. They are out of touch with Jewish life and many of them never get to the larger Jewish centers.

Perhaps a relative of yours is among them. Has your daughter married and gone to live out west in one of those towns? Is your son trying his fortune in a lonely out-of-the-way village? Maybe you don't have time to write them all the news that happens back home.

Subscribe to the REVIEW then for some one living in a distant place. It will be a welcome gift, a weekly news-letter full of familiar names a steady reminder of you. But do it now, to-day, this minute.

NORTHERN ONTARIO CANADA

Northern Ontario, now open for settlement at fifty cents per acre, contains millions of acres of the finest agricultural land in the world. Its resources in lumber, mineral, water power, fish, game and scenery are immense. The land calls for men to cultivate it, and in return will give health, comfort and prosperity.

What settlers say of the soil, climate, farming and forest life, is told in a most attractive booklet issued under the direction of the Honourable John S. Martin, Minister of Agriculture for Ontario. Full instructions in regards to acquiring a title to these rich agricultural lands are also given.

For free copies write: H. A. MACDONELL, Director of Colonization, Parliament Buildings, Toronto, Ontario.

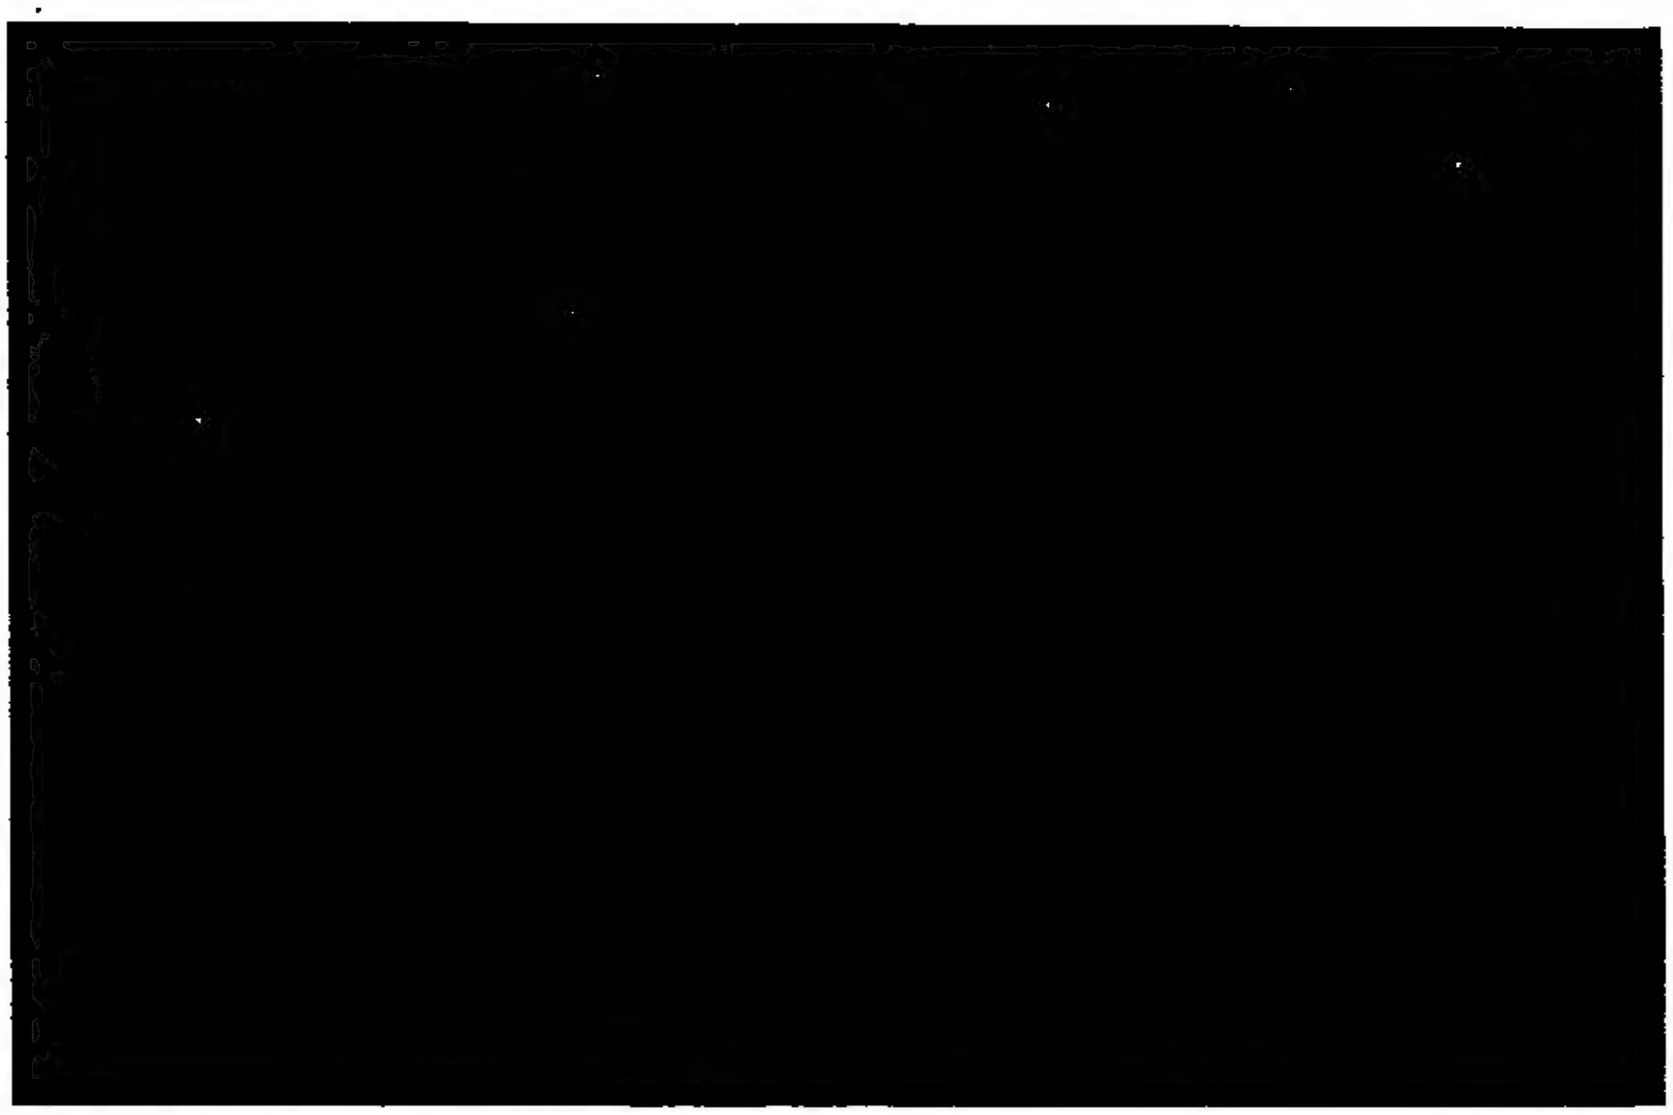
"CRAFTSMEN IN KEEPING THINGS NEW"



Drapes that demand care—

HEAVY drapes and portieres of silk, velours, tapestry, etc., should be dry-cleaned often. They harbour dust that mars their beauty and lustre—spoil's their rich texture. They offer an open invitation to moths. Frequent dry-cleaning will lengthen their life, protect them against damage, maintain their beauty and gratify your own personal pride. We have had drapes valued at $1,500.00 each entrusted to us. Isn't that a clear tribute to our craftsmarship? No matter how sumptuous the fabric, how large the drape, how intricate the trimming—here are people trained by years of experience and a constant daily flow of the finest of home furnishings to delight you with their skill. Each day they are proving on drapes of every type that we are worthy of our claim to be "Craftsmen in Keeping Things New."

Cleaning Drapes costs from 75c to $4.00 per pair. Dyeing from $1.25 to $5.75 per pair.

impatient with them. He never scolded them. He sympathized with them. He appreciated them as human beings drifting on the stream of life, driven by forces which they do not understand and cannot control.

Was it the circumstance that Tashrack wrote for the middle class "balebatish" paper, the "Tageblatt," that coloured his view of life and gave it the tranquillity and assurance that characterized his writing? The more modern Jewish press—the Forward, the Day—exhibits a restlessness, a feverishness which bespeaks the neurotic condition of modern Jewish life. Tashrack's characters were easy-going, undisturbed by the complexities and difficulties that bewilder the new arrivals with their uprooted personalities. They have no neuroses, no psychoses, no problems. They make money. They manufacture. They build. They belong to synagogues. They quarrel over congregational affairs. They give freely to charities and institutions. They raise families of Americans.

Tashrack was a humorist. He saw the laughable side of the life which he depicted. His laughter was gentle, indulgent. If his people blundered and created comic situations he did not blame them. He realized that the essential characteristic of the American environment was the stolidity of mediocrity and he was satisfied that his Jewish heroes were establishing themselves comfortably in this environment and participating in its security. If they did not feel the subtle tragedy of their gradual drying up, they had the compensating sense of material well-being. Tashrask perhaps saw through the thin veneer of their imaginary "normalcy." He never ridiculed them. He smiled pleasantly and was happy with them.

There was another phase of Tashrack's literary activity. He was a deep student of Talmudic folk lore and homiletic lore, and his compilation and translation of stories from the Talmud and the rabbis was a notable contribution to Yiddish literature. He was not a participant in the hectic struggle of the Jewish spirit for self-recognition and self-expression in America. It was this tendency to aloofness from the arena of life that led him to seek satisfaction in the old tomes of Jewish wisdom. He could not sense the deeper significance of present-day life. He looked for values in the records of the sages.

Jewish life in America is much the poorer now for the death of Tashrack, humorist and scholar.

LEAGUE OF NATIONS TO CONSIDER CALENDAR REFORMS

The special sub-committee of the League of Nations has recommended to the Assembly of the League two proposals for the reform of the calendar. The matter has been under investigation for the last two years, and the Chief Rabbi of England presented the Jewish point of view in the matter some time ago. The sub-committee finally decided to ask the Assembly to choose between a scheme of dividing the year of 365 days into thirteen months of twenty-eight days each and an additional special New Year Day without a name, with a similar arrangement for a Leap Day, or an alternative plan of having in each quarter two months of thirty days and one month of thirty-one days, with a "Zero Day" preceding the first of January, or two months of thirty-one days in the last quarter. In a Leap Year there would be two quarters containing two months of thirty-one days.

ANNOUNCEMENT

The Delco-Light Company of Dayton, Ohio, have just appointed Messrs. J. J. DE YOUNG LIMITED (J. J. De Young Greenberg, president) as authorized dealers and distributors for Toronto and vicinity of Frigidaire products.

Mr. Greenberg, who is one of Toronto's well known business men and has had a great deal of experience in the building of private homes and apartment houses, was greatly impressed with the possibilities of electric refrigeration, and when the opportunity presented itself of securing a franchise for a product backed by a corporation having the enormous resources of General Motors, he quickly consummated the deal.

The J. J. DE YOUNG COMPANY LIMITED is now remodelling the premises at No. 391 Spadina Avenue, and when the alterations are completed will have one of the most attractive showrooms in Canada devoted entirely to the display of Frigidaire products. The Company intend to

Rabbi Isserman's Editorial

To the Jew this departure in the industrial world is of tremendous importance. With the establishment of the five-day week in industry, and perhaps also in commerce, the traditional Jewish Sabbath, now practically discarded by the overwhelming majority of Jews, will have a chance to be revived. The synagogues now empty on Saturday morning will have a chance to be crowded with worshippers. More than that, all those important Jewish values which the Sabbath symbolized, many of which were swept away when the Sabbath was swept away may be re-established. The demands of economic life, certainly on the continent of America, made it impossible to observe the traditional Sabbath. The Sabbath was swept out of Jewish life. It exists only to-day for a few women, one or two retired or very wealthy business men and the rabbis. A five-day week will make the Sabbath and the Sabbath spirit possible. The late Israel Zangwill on his last visit here, stated that the outstanding error of Reform Judaism had been when it did not transfer the entire Jewish Sabbath to Sunday. Then he maintained, those Jewish values which clustered about the Sabbath, as well as the Sabbath itself, could have been retained by the Jews of America. As it is both have been lost. Whether Zangwill's suggestion of transferring the Sabbath, with its complete wrenching away from Jewish tradition, would have been healthier for Judaism than the Sabbath gesture which exists now, is a debatable matter. But this is certain: that the loss of the Sabbath spirit has seriously impaired Judaism, and its re-establishment would be an invigorating tonic to the spiritual life of the Jew. The five-day week will make that possible.

We hail, therefore, its institution in the world's largest industrial firm, for where that firm leads others will follow. The Jewish employees of the Ford Company, and they number several thousand, will now have a chance to retain the Sabbath spirit. As the five-day week spreads, it will bring greater freedom to the masses, but to the Jewish masses it will bring the freedom to live their spiritual lives, and the opportunity to sing: "Come, let us welcome the Sabbath with gladness."

LOEW'S

The outstanding picture romance of the present seasons Loew's management presents "The Waltz Dream" for the first time in Toronto. This is one more triumph for Metro—the makers of "The Merry Widow." The princess weds with the cool aloofness of her class, her heart chilled by the discipline of generations. The count with all the ardour of a gay young cavalier—buoyant, eager and madly in love. The strains of the Viennese Waltz are played hauntingly through the scenes of this beautiful love story which depends on the world famous operetta for its glorious theme. It was Oscar Strauss' famous music which inspired the story, and it is the superlative production which will ensure Loew's unqualified approval. Muriel and Fisher's big Revue heads five acts of excellent vaudeville entertainment.
